

Jack The Giant

1. A large and jol - ly — gi - ant who liked to joke and play —

— would jump a-round — the coun - try-side — as to Coda for last verse

joy - ful - ly he'd say: —

Coda

stomp up - on his toe. He had to stomp up - on his toe. Yes, he would, he'd stomp up - on — his toe. — Oh! —

- 2 "I am Jack the Giant and I am very kind
And I shall gently laugh and sing
And hope you do not mind.
- 3 For though I am so very large, you must not make a fuss.
And be it strange, I'll never change,
For I'm not dangerous."
- 4 Well, the people in the village were very fond of Jack,
But often in his jumping 'round
He'd step upon a shack.
- 5 A cottage now and then would fall, and many times a bridge.
And once he squashed a cabbage patch
By leaping off a ridge.
- 6 Then the carriage of the mayor was toppled to the ground.
And angels in the sky above
Could hear his every bound.
- 7 Now all his friends were angry, yet Jack did not know why.
So he sat out on the edge of town,
And there began to cry.
- 8 "Can it be I am so huge that people are afraid?
Or maybe just the way I look,
Or something that I've said?"
- 9 'Twas then a magic message appeared before his eyes,
And then a pigeon gliding down,
An angel in disguise.
- 10 "Jack, you must not jump about," he heard the stranger talk,
"And do not run or even hop,
For gentle giants walk."
- 11 So Jack returned a happy guy, rejoicing as he go.
And when he felt the urge to jump,
He'd stomp upon his toe.
He had to stomp upon his toe.
Yes he would, he'd stomp upon his toe. Oh!
